This day brings together those allied health professionals working in end of life care, from elderly care units, care homes as well as hospices and palliative care settings with managers and other clinicians.

What can the new bring to the old and how can we reclaim old skills into new ways of working in the context of ever increasing constraints on staffing? Are generalist settings tapping into and releasing the full potential of AHPs? Do they know what AHPs can achieve to improve end of life care? Do we have untapped potential within our own teams?

This study day will cover examples of AHPs developing new and exciting models of care and adapting to shifts in working contexts, including taking specialist skills into the community and the use of latest technology.

Topics will include:

- Assistive technology
- Dysphagia—practical and ethical issues
- Management of fatigue
- Transporting skills to other environments
- Multi-professional rehabilitation.

Who should attend?

- Physiotherapists
- Occupational Therapists
- Speech and Language Therapists
- Dieticians
- Rehab Assistants working in palliative care
- Managers responsible for AHPs
- Other palliative care clinicians.
